EMBERLIN WINE LIST

The name Emberlin derives from ember – a glowing piece of coal, still carrying the heat of the fire.

Cooking over an open fire is one of the oldest ways of preparing food. Yet in some parts of the world, it is far more than that. The art and tradition of cooking over fire have become an integral part of some countries identity and culture – much like wine has in many places.

There are countries where these two traditions meet particularly naturally, where food and wine have evolved side by side over generations, shaping one another and the identity of the places they come from. We have identified five wine countries with a strong grilling culture and chosen to give them a special place in this wine list.

From Argentina's Asado to South Africa's Braai, and onwards through the United States, Australia and Spain, we have sought out wines that feel at home around the fire – wines made to be shared, enjoyed with food and poured in good company. Just as food cultures evolve over generations, so does the world of wine. Here, classic styles and traditions meet modern ideas, producers and expressions.

Alongside them, we have gathered wines from classic regions around the world that we simply love with ingredients from both sea and land, cooked over fire. Bordeaux, the Rhône Valley, Piemonte and Tuscany are just some of the places that have found their way onto the list.

We hope that warmth, in every sense of the word, shines through in this wine list.

Cheers!

Emberlin Sommelier Team,
Rasmus Klintberg
Linus Åberg

CHAMPAGNE GROWER HIGHLIGHT – AURORE CASANOVA

Behind Domaine Aurore Casanova is Aurore Casanova, a former international ballerina who returned to her family's vineyards in Montagne de Reims in 2011. Together with her husband Jean-Baptiste Robinet, she crafts champagnes defined by discipline, precision and elegance.

Casanova was early recognised as one of Champagne's most promising new producers. Today, their lieux-dits and the prestige cuvée Union Grand Cru – from Le Mesnil-sur-Oger and Puisieulx – rank among the most serious and exciting champagnes in the region.

The work is organic, guided by biodynamic principles and minimal intervention in the cellar. They farm approximately 3.5 hectares in Puisieulx and Le Mesnil-sur-Oger (Grand Cru), as well as Champvoisy and Épernay. The vines were planted between 1928 and 2011, with the oldest parcels vinified separately. Fermentations are natural, the wines rest for extended periods on the lees, and several cuvées are aged in older oak barrels from Jacques Selosse and Egly-Ouriet.

The style is gastronomic, generous yet razor-sharp: champagnes of precision, minerality and depth. Personal, vibrant wines made to be shared at the table.

GRILL NATIONS

ARGENTINA

ASADO

Argentina may very well be the first country that comes to mind when thinking about nations with a strong grill culture. Asado is really the true meaning of something much more than just cooking over fire.

Asado is a way of gathering, spending time with your beloved ones, and performing almost a ritual of cooking over open fire for several hours, sometimes a full day. Friends gather, large cuts are cooked slowly, often one after another, as the meal gradually takes shape. Wine is poured and the meal becomes as much about the hours around the fire as what is on the plate.

Argentina might also be the Grill Nation that has the strongest connection to its wine - The first variety that comes to mind when thinking of Argentina is of course the national grape variety Malbec which is just brilliant with a great steak - They simply belong together.

Cabernet Franc has taken an important role in many top vineyards in Mendoza and is produced in a serious style, and Pinot Noir is thriving in the cooler climate of Patagonia. On the white side the aromatic Torrontes grape contributes with fresher whites, while old vines Semillon and Chardonnay are produced in a bigger style.

AUSTRALIA

BARBIE

Unlike the Asado of Argentina, Barbie is not a very serious procedure of cooking. Down under, Barbie is short for Barbecue, and when it comes to the actual food, it basically just means to put something on the grill. But more like Asado, Barbie is also a cultural ritual. It's a vibe people bond over, plan their weekends around, and celebrate life with. It's where the smell of grilled meat, fish or seafood blends perfectly with the salty sea breeze, and where the smoky aroma becomes the heart of the gathering. From the backyard to the beach, Barbie is relaxed and unpretentious, and there is something appealing about the simplicity of it – good produce, fire, salt and not much else.

Australian wine includes traditional Bordeaux-blends of the Margaret River, Shiraz from Barossa and Clare Valley-Riesling, all that have gained their own cult status in the world of wine. But also more modern cool planted Pinot Noir and Chardonnays, as well as experiments with Viognier, Tempranillo and several other grapes that makes Australia a very diverse wine country, fun to follow and discover. Confident, diverse and unafraid to evolve – much like the country itself.

SOUTH AFRICA

BRAAI

With the risk of repeating myself, Braai follows much the same path as the grilling cultures mentioned earlier. In South Africa too, it all starts with the fire, but it is the social aspect, the way friends and family gather around it and spend the afternoon and evening together, that turns Braai into a culture rather than simply a method of cooking.

South Africa is a country with a turbulent history, many different ethnic groups, and eleven official languages. Yet Braai is a tradition shared by South Africans from all walks of life. It connects the country, and if you are in South Africa, there is a Braai happening somewhere near you every single day.

Wine also has a long history here, but is by no means limited to the classics. Much like Australia, South Africa has a tradition of Bordeaux blends, as well as its own indigenous Pinotage. Along the coast, however, the cold Atlantic waters create perfect conditions for world-class white wines, particularly Chardonnay and, above all, Chenin Blanc, locally known as Steen, which is absolutely fantastic with the oysters found along the coast.

USA

BARBEQUE

There is no single American barbecue. Ask for barbecue in Texas, the Carolinas or Kansas City and you may get three very different answers. Brisket, ribs, pork and sausage are cooked slowly over wood and smoke, sometimes for most of a day. The technique may change from state to state, but the idea remains: time, smoke and fire can turn relatively simple ingredients into something extraordinary.

American wine has its own story of regional identity. California may be the most famous, but Oregon, Washington and many other regions have developed their own expressions, with producers constantly pushing the boundaries of what American wine can be.

THE LEGACY OF STEVEN KISTLER

Kistler Vineyards was founded in 1978 by Steve Kistler and Mark Bixler on the idea that terroir-driven single-clone Burgundian wines could be made in California. Their Chardonnay and Pinot Noir from Sonoma helped shape a whole generation of California producers.

Occidental is Steve Kistler's Pinot Noir project founded in 2011 together with his daughter Catherine who joined in 2017. The vineyards lie in Freestone-Occidental on the far western Sonoma Coast just 4–5 miles from the Pacific and close to the limit of where Pinot Noir can be grown. The main sites are Bodega Headlands, Occidental Station and Bodega Ridge, planted with Burgundian grand cru clones from Vosne-Romanée.

Since 2017 Jason Kesner, formerly vineyard manager at Hudson Vineyards, has overseen all production for Kistler Vineyards while Steve Kistler focuses on Occidental. Today the single-vineyard Chardonnays, among them Durell, McCrea, and Dutton Ranch rank among the most sought-after in California.

SPAIN

PARILLA

In the Basque Country, the parrilla is a craft in its own right. The idea is remarkably simple: start with exceptional produce and let the fire do the rest. A great txuleta needs little more than heat and patience. So does a whole turbot or a freshly caught fish from the Cantabrian coast. The skill lies in knowing the fire, the wood, the heat and exactly when to leave the ingredient alone.

This respect for the raw material runs deep in Spanish food culture, and the wines are no different. From the bright, saline character of Galician wines to the depth of Rioja and Ribera del Duero, Spain offers an extraordinary range of wines to bring to the table.

THE GREAT WINES OF JEREZ

Sherry is one of the most underrated wines in the world.

The fortified wines made in The Sherry Triangle in the province of Cadiz, Andalucia in southern Spain also carries one of the longest histories of wine production in the world and has had its golden eras.

After a long time in the shadows we sense, with joy, that it is now coming forward again. Characterized by the combination of the chalk and fossil rich white soils known as “Albariza” and its very unique vinification marked by the flor, the oxidative ageing and/or the maturation in so-lera systems, it offers a wide range of styles, from bone dry and elegant, through the nutty, salty full-bodied wines to one of the sweetest wines in the world, Pedro Ximenez.

We absolutely love these wines and find the complexity, concentration and quality in comparison to the prices unmatched in the world of wine.

If you are curious to try something different, like a Manzanilla with your oyster, a Fino with your grilled fish, or an Oloroso with your steak, do not hesitate to ask us for some guidance. You will be rewarded with a great experience.
